Three years, two careers!

Students who are interested in taking both the Human Resources and Leadership Development programs can do so under the dual offering, which can lead toward a path to two associate degrees in three years.

The dual degree option maximizes synergies between the Human Resources and Leadership Development through the sharing of resources, such as faculty expertise, facilities and community programs. Additionally, those taking Human Resources and Leadership Development will graduate with additional skills making them more marketable to both industries.

The dual option features an abbreviated schedule, a diverse environment, and enhanced opportunities for collaboration and networking.

The Human Resources and Leadership Development option totals 78 credits, and it is structured to be completed over three years.

- Prepare for jobs such as:
 - Human Resources: compensation and benefits coordinator, training and development coordinator, Human Resources or payroll assistant.
 - Leadership Development: branch manager, circulation manager, sales engineer, Human Resources manager, team manager or supervisor.
- Practice skills through simulated workplace projects, including the hiring process, compensation and benefits, training and development, employment law and corporate culture.
- Evening classes accommodate the working adult. An accelerated learning environment blends interactive in-class activities with online learning.
- Develop leadership skills that can be applied immediately in your work and personal life.
- Enjoy networking opportunities with local employers through capstone projects prior to graduation.
